Celebrating a Longtime Commitment to Early Years in Bruce County

Walkerton, Ontario: “Bruce County has been blazing the trail to ensure that our youngest residents along with their parents and caregivers continue to have quality services. Making investments in the Early Years programs over the past number of years is a decision we are proud of,” articulates Warden Mitch Twolan.

County Council reflects on the commitment made to retain the level of Early Years’ services. Their pledge resulted in a program that offered services beyond provincial contributions, and which will continue to impact future services. Over the last five years, Bruce County has contributed over $1,000,000 (one million dollars) to support the delivery of these programs. Early childhood educators deliver a range of programs and services that are responsive and supportive of the important role that parents have in their lives of their children.

CAO Kelley Coulter explains that: “Bruce County levels the playing field for child development and family well-being. Providing a professional and compassionate environment for children to develop in allows parents to gain confidence in their formative role”, she adds.
